Abstract

In attracting investors to invest their capital in Indonesia, the government undertakes a series of policies to facilitate the movement of investors. However, investors are often confronted with various issues in relation to the business world; legal protection for investors in the purchase of land needs to be done to ensure legal certainty and improved the conduciveness of business climate. In this study, there are two issues that will be discussed: how is the Indonesian government's policy in the field of investment and how are the efforts to prevent problems in the purchase of land by investors? This research is a normative legal research. To prevent problems in purchasing land in the future, investors need to know the rule of law in Indonesia. Each stage to purchase land need to be done by law and set forth in the form of agreement and notarial deed
